A Short Honey-moon.

A letter from King George county to the Richmond Dispatch says: "It will be remembered that several weeks ago we chronicled the romantic marriage near Corners of Captain James Harrod of Washington, D. C., to Mrs. Sorell, of this county, and that this unique wedding grew out of an advertisement by Harrod, which was answered by widow Sorell. It will also be remembered that the contracting parties never saw each other until the Washingtonian arrived here to consummate a most novel courtship, which immediately followed the advertisement for a wife. A remarkable courtship that led to the Sunday marriage heretofore described in full. Owing to that most uncommon method of marrying, and the bride being a well-known resident of this county, the affair was elaborately discussed, and the 'honey-moon' watched with that degree of real curiosity which nothing less than a remarkable romance can create. The newly-united pair received many callers and congratulations.
The groom circulated freely among the people of his suddenly-adopted county, and has freely talked of his plans and purposes here. Meanwhile Madam Rumor began to whisper around quite liberally that the 'honeymoon' was not altogether free from uncongeniality—that 'disappointment' was a disturbing element, and that it would not be a bad plan for parties to become acquainted at least, before uniting in matrimony. But in the midst of Madam Rumor's interesting details, this romance of the forest suddenly ended, and left quid nunc to talk on tawdry topics.
Some days ago the bride visited one of her married daughters in another part of the county, leaving the gray-haired groom in charge of their cosy home. During her absence the newlymarried captain packed up his part of the household goods and chattels, loaded them on a hired wagon, and bled away to the nearest steamboat-landing on the Potomac river, and there boarded a steamer for — who knows where?
and without even tarrying to say, 'good-by, my lover, good-by.' Captain Harrod is an excellent talker, well-informed, a man of pleasant address and manners, but where he has gone and the cause of his sudden departure are questions not now known to the public.

Battle With a Wild Bull.

The crew of the Brigantine, N. J., life-saving station had a thrilling bulfight a few days ago, and succeeded after a hard battle in exterminating the only wild bull remaining on the island.
The animal was a living exemplification of the theory of the survival of the fittest. Years ago, either by swimming the bay from the meadows of the mainland, or from a wreck on the beach, a colony of cattle, more muscular than the barnyard bovine, made Brigantine their home. But the encroachments of modern civilization, in the shape of summer resorts, led to the extermination of all but one of the cattle. The old patriarch, whose living had been secured by scant pasture of wire grass and bayberry bushes, was a great annoyance to men of the life-saving crew, whom he charged upon at every opportunity, and scan organized effort was made to exterminate him.
Armed with double-barreled guns, loaded with goose shot, and slugs, the seven brave men set forth. Keeper Rider claimed that his position was established by the precedent observed in the life boat, where he sat in the stern with the steering bar, and consequently he insisted on bringing up the rear to better guide his forces. But when the bull was found, and charged the retreating forces, the gallant keeper failed to keep his position.
Alex. Falkenberg gained a cedar tree, Keeper Rider and Clate Berry took refuge in the hen roost, while the rest made for the second story of the station, with the exception of Sam Jones, who was chased round and round the house by the infuriated bull.
As the bull passed each gunner he received a load of goose shot, until he became so heavy with lead that his muscular system could stand no more and he dropped. Even then when Al. Seaman and Lambert Parker, assisted by Bob Fharro, attempted to cut his throat, he snatched their right and left. Finally he was killed and cut up, a choice portion cooked all day, and now the boys are looking for some one who can eat a piece of the meat.
